

Guide to the Lunar Cycle Fertility Overview

Dear Customer

Thank you for ordering your absolutely free Lunar Cycle Fertility Overview. Below you can find some guidance on how to read the Overview.

For every year you get a listing (table) with the following headings:

	1	2	3	4
	Time	Time	Sex	Brth
1. Time,	January 12	10-20	boy
2. Time,	February 10	18- 4	girl	**
3. Sex,	March 12	3-13	boy	**
4. Brth,	April 10	12-22	girl
	May 9	23- 9	???

The first Time (1) contains the date of your peak fertility. It's the date of recurrence of the angle between the sun and the moon that occurred at your own birth. This single date is a most appropriate day for conception.

The second Time (2) contains the optimal conception time (hour). The given times display the 'action times'. This means that you should (at least) schedule sexual intercourse (about) in the middle of the interval in the given time frame. The times are given in the Time Zone of your Residence in the 24-hour format. For example: 13 equals 1 p.m. and 9 means 9 a.m. etc...On the last page of this Guide, you can find a table listing the times in military style and otherwise.

The heading Sex (3) points to the sex of your future child when you have sexual intercourse during the mentioned time span. Three question marks (???) in this column mark the period in which the gender of your future child is uncertain, due to the borderline position of the planets in question. The given time, however, may be (very) appropriate for conception.

In the fourth column Brth (4) you may sometimes find two asterisks (). These are the times of your highest (lunar cycle) fertility. These are absolutely SUPER fertile times! Please, also note that all the given times on the Overview point to your peak fertile period.

How to read the Overview now?

Let's take a look at the example printed above. Go to the first row under the heading.

Do you see the first column with the time/period January 12? The second column reads 10 - 20 and the third column reads 'boy'.

What does this all mean now?

Well, the first column indicates the day of your peak fertility. So, January 10, February 10, March 12, April 10 etc. are your single most fertile days according to the Lunar Cycles.

These are the single days you should have sexual intercourse on if you want to conceive a child, the more so if you encounter fertility problems.

In the second column you will find the times you should have sex on, because these times point to the hours on which the odds are VERY high you will conceive a child. Let us continue with our example.

January 10, between 10 - 20 means that on January 10 your fertility peaks between 10 (= 10 a.m.) and 20 (= 8 p.m.) so that you should have sex in that time frame to conceive a child. In the third column you find the word 'boy' meaning that the gender of the future child will be a boy if you have unprotected sex on this single day. If the gender of your future child does not matter, you can have unprotected sex on all the listed days, whatever is in the third column (boy, girl, or three ???).

Your next fertility peak is on February 10, between 18 - 4 (this is between 6 p.m. and 4 a.m. the following morning). Here the gender of the future child will be a girl.

Your next fertile period is March 12 between 3 - 13 (this means between 3 a.m. and 1 p.m.). When having sex in this time frame you will conceive a boy.

So, if you want to try for a boy, you should ONLY CONSISTENTLY have sex on the single days marked 'boy'. On the other days you should only have protected sex or no sex at all.

For your convenience (as a visual aid) the information in the different rows has a specific color:

- Light green text shows your SUPER fertile dates (whatever the gender of the baby may be)
- Black text shows the dates to try for a BOY
- Dark green text shows the dates to try for a GIRL
- Blue indicates the dates when the gender cannot be determined because the Moon is about to enter another sign. In this case you will always find three ??? in the third (3) column)

So, if you have fertility problems and the gender of your future child does not matter you should CONSISTENTLY have (unprotected) sex on ALL the given single days listed in the first column. Don't skip a day. It does not matter how many times you have sex on these days, it depends on how much your body can handle. Sometimes you can find two  in the fourth column. These are SUPER fertility days. Never ever skip these days as your fertility is at an all-time high then.

If you want to try for a boy, you should CONSISTENTLY have unprotected sex on the single days marked 'boy'.

If you want to try for a girl, you should CONSISTENTLY have unprotected sex on the single days marked 'girl'.

Oct2007

Also keep in mind that there are TWO fertile periods every month: the mid-cycle ovulation and the lunar cycle return. The Overview only provides you the single dates of the lunar cycle return and has nothing to do with your ovulation cycle!

The more both periods coincide, the more chances you have to become pregnant. However, even if both periods do not coincide, they exist on their own and work on their own. This just means that you really ARE fertile on the days listed on the Overview, even if they don't correspond with your own expected period or if you are menstruating.

Please also note that the Lunar Cycle Fertility Overview is only valid for the Time Zone you provided us. So, if you move to another place with another Time Zone, the Overview is not valid anymore!

Also, if your date is for example: September 6, from 21 - 9 this should be read as follows:

- Your time frame is from 9 p.m. on September 6th through 9 a.m. on September 7th

Often women ask how reliable this method is.

If you have fertility problems and if the gender of your future baby does not matter, we are amazed how reliable the Overview is. The listed days really seem to point to your peak fertility. Chances are, if you CONSISTENTLY follow the Overview, you will conceive within two years. Especially when you try to also live a more healthy life (watch your diet and try to go to the basics, so no junk food, and get enough rest and exercise) the odds are it definitely will work. Women who cannot conceive should primarily clean their body (and their husbands should do the same!).

If you follow the Overview to specifically try for a boy or a girl, the Overview is still one of the most reliable methods. However, it's not infallible! We know of some failures too (the reason of the failures is that the moment of insemination cannot be determined beforehand. When fertilization occurs when the Moon is in the next sign the gender prediction will fail). In our opinion the accuracy rate of the gender prediction is still 70%+.

On the last page of this Guide you can find the Time Conversion table (military times versus am/pm notation).

Kindest regards and good luck!
